AMI Graduate Appointed Center for Ethical Solutions Scholar

AMI graduate Mohammad Ali Naquvi, JD, MS, was appointed a scholar at the Center for Ethical Solutions: Innovative Approaches to Health Care Policy.

The Center for Ethical Solutions (CES) is focused on finding practical answers to the difficult questions of medical ethics and health policy — answers that look beyond the preconceived and the usual, and that provide people with options that might otherwise be overlooked. The Center supports research and educates the public on its findings of practical solutions to problems facing the practice of Medicine. The Center will not provide charitable funds directly to individuals. Rather, it will freely provide the public with information on the most-pressing ethical issues in Medicine by funding research and the development of products to share the result of that research with the public. Any proceeds received from products such as books or movies will be used for educational outreach and for funding future research.

Their main avenues to achieve these goals include:

- Sponsoring scholars to research and analyze ethical problems in Medicine and then report and discuss their findings through publishing books, papers, and articles
- Producing documentary films, videos, and websites including blogs
- Sponsoring public discussion groups, forums, panels, lectures, and other similar programs

Lobbying, attempting to influence legislation, and taking part in political campaigns are decidedly excluded from the activities of the Center for Ethical Solutions.

Ali currently serves as the Editor of the Center's only journal, Legal Trends in Bioethics, which is published quarterly online.
