Cindy Geppert MD, PhD and Wayne Shelton, PhD have coauthored an article that has just appeared in the latest issue of the Mayo Clinic Proceedings, which is titled “A Comparison of General Medical and Clinical Ethics Consultations: What Can We Learn From Each Other?” This was a paper that grew out of Cindy’s master’s research project on which Professor Shelton was her mentor. They wrote this paper to fill a gap in the medical and clinical ethics literature about the similarities and differences between medical and clinical ethics consultation, a topic they believe would help practicing physicians better understand the role of clinical ethics consultations in contemporary health care.
